

Irvine Health, Property Value Alert

Irvine neighborhoods in danger

Homes, apartments, schools, places of worship...

Have you heard about the toxic TCE contamination under Irvine? TCE is a cancerous chemical that has been spreading under Irvine from the El Toro Marine Base (an EPA Superfund site and home of the "Great Park") for many years.

Most Irvine residents don't realize the contamination has spread under a large part of Irvine. As a result, thousands of Irvine residents are living atop this toxic EPA Superfund plume of contamination that's just 150 feet below Irvine homes, apartments, businesses, schools, places of worship, etc. So why haven't you heard about this before? The contamination has been covered up by city officials, the Irvine water company, realtors, property managers, developers and others to keep Irvine residents from suing.

Unfortunately, this toxic contamination has impacted Irvine's drinking water per the IRWD's water report. TCE is also dangerous because it produces toxic vapors that can migrate up through the soil into people's homes, apartments, etc. like it has done elsewhere. TCE vapors can also get into homes, apartments, etc. via tainted water such as when taking a shower. The contamination also threatens Irvine property values. After all, would you want to buy a home that sits atop a toxic EPA Superfund site?

Most likely not. Did your realtor tell you about the contamination when you bought in Irvine? Did your property manager tell you about it before you signed your apartment lease? If not, you may have legal recourse that could save at least some of your equity, reduce your property taxes, or get out of your apartment lease.

Irvine residents have been lied to about this matter for years—Irvine residents deserve better! In January, Irvine's Larry Agran called for contamination testing because a former Irvine resident testified she, her daughter, her son, and friends have all come down with medical problems including death, and they all lived in Irvine, and they drank Irvine's water for years.
